

IDENTITY RECOVERY COVERAGE

Identity Recovery Coverage Frequently Asked Questions For Home Owners

Who is covered?

Coverage and service apply to any "insured" as defined in the Homeowners policy. In most Homeowners policies, "insured" is defined as follows:

"Insured" means you and residents of your household who are:

- Your relatives; or
- Other persons under the age of 21 and in the care of any person named above.

Why do you call it Identity Recovery Coverage?

Because the program is designed to assist victims of identity theft with recovering control of their identity and correcting their credit history.

Conventional "identity theft" insurance only reimburses people for the expenses they incur to do all the work themselves. Our Identity Recovery Coverage also includes services to assist insured in restoring their good name and credit.

What services do the case managers actually perform?

Confirmed identity theft claimants are referred to a case manager who guides them through all the steps in the process to correct their credit history or identity records. This can include:

- Working with credit bureaus, creditors, financial institutions, and others to identify errors and help claimants correct their records;
- Enrolling victims in an electronic credit monitoring service;
- Requesting a fraud alert with credit bureaus where warranted;
- Preparing communications for claimants to send the Social Security Administration, their state's Department of Motor Vehicles and other government entities;
- Providing legal referrals for assistance with court appearances and legal entanglements related to identity theft;
- Working with claimants to check for a recurrence of identity theft problems;
- Keeping detailed records of the steps taken and remaining in the process.

Which identity theft cases are referred to a Case Manager?

Cases are referred to a Case Manager when someone illegally assumes the identity of the insured and uses the victim's identity to commit fraud or crimes. For example, this includes instances where the thief takes control over the insured's existing accounts by changing the address to which statements are sent. Other examples are cases where thieves open new accounts or commit other crimes in the insured's name. Most victims need professional assistance in these cases because by taking control of the insured's identity the thief is able to operate undetected for a period of time and commit multiple fraudulent acts or crimes. The victim only becomes aware of the crime when they attempt to make a purchase, take out a loan or take some other action only to be denied because their credit history or records show the trail of the criminal. Thieves in these cases leave such a confusing tangle of misinformation in so many different institutions that most persons need help in navigating through the recovery process.

When you say "the case manager will assist the insured," does that mean that they'll do all the work and the insured doesn't have to take any action?

The case manager will assist the victim in all steps that a third party can legally perform. Understand that most creditors will only deal with the victim directly to resolve problems, but the case manager can assist them in making a call or contact and otherwise facilitate the process. Case managers know who to contact, how to contact, what information the creditor or institution will need and how to demonstrate that the victim's records or accounts have been fraudulently misused. You could think of case managers as a personal trainer at the victim's side to coach them through the entire identity recovery process.

What about misuse of an insured's credit card account, do they get any help?

Instances where someone gets a credit card number and makes unauthorized purchases to the insured's account are not true identity theft. While such cases are irritating, in fact most people can resolve these problems with a call and a letter to their bank or credit card company. Insureds experiencing credit card misuse are encouraged to call our toll free Identity Recovery Help Line to obtain our Identity Recovery Customer Guide. The guide supplies insureds with the information and steps they need to take to resolve these cases themselves.

What if a victim is being subjected to a lawsuit or other legal action, can the case manager offer legal advice?

Our case management service is staffed with experienced specialists but they are not lawyers. We can, however, refer you to pre-screened and qualified legal counsel experienced with identity theft legal issues.

Does the Identity Theft insurance pay for fraudulent charges that an identity thief makes to someone's account?

Credit card companies, banks, merchants and other financial institutions generally assume most losses from identity theft. The victim needs to notify these companies of course but typically victims are not responsible for more than the first $50 on a bill and in fact can often get the charges removed. But the insured is still stuck with the burden of correcting their credit history and identity records that may have been damaged.

Easing the insured's burden in cleaning up their records and restoring their reputation is what our Identity Recovery Coverage is designed to do.

If your program is so much better does that mean it's more expensive?

On the contrary, our Identity Recovery coverage is priced at or below what other companies are charging for expense reimbursement insurance without any personal recovery services.

I received a notice that my personal information was lost or stolen. Does this mean I'm an identity theft victim?

No, most people whose information is compromised never have their identities fraudulently misused. However, you should be especially vigilant in checking on your credit report periodically.
